

Eric Holder Quits

CABINET

Holder resigning as attorney general, officials say

Published September 23, 2014 · FoxNews.com

 0  0

Trending in Politics

- 1 Holder resigning as attorney general after tumultuous term
- 2 Cheney: 'Stunned' over Obama comparison between Mideast, Ferguson unrest
- 3 Rouhani ties Iran cooperation on Mideast violence to nuke deal
- 4 Changes to firearm purchase forms draw strong reaction
- 5 Senate Dem feeling heat from GOP rising star in Arkansas

See all Trends

Attorney General Eric Holder plans to announce Thursday that he is resigning from the Obama administration, officials confirmed to Fox News. The decision would end a tumultuous six-year term for the nation's top law enforcement

0 views

Embed: Start at:

Attorney General Eric Holder QUITs!

Eric Holder will announce his resignation as U.S. attorney general today, according to officials within the Justice Department. Holder will remain at the position, which he has held for six years, until his successor is confirmed.

Holder's tenure, which included attempts to dismantle the Second Amendment through Operation Fast and Furious and Operation Choke Point, was plagued with controversy and scandal.

Whether it be protecting big banks, attacking the Second Amendment or helping to cover up illegal activity in the IRS, Holder's crimes are countless in number.